Continuation of PTOL/SB/51:

At least one error upon which reissue is based is described as follows:

Each of claims 1-5 originally required that the axle guard system comprise a cleat-free area that extends lengthwise from the inner edge “at least about the width of one of said cleats.” At least one error being relied upon as the basis for reissue is that this recitation of the cleat-free area is too narrow. The cleat-free area of my invention is wide enough that refuse, like cable, rope, and wire, is less likely to be directed toward and end up wrapped around the axle of the compaction machine on which the wheel is mounted.

Each of claims 13 and 20 originally required that the axle guard system comprise at least one circumferential barrier mounted on a cleat-free area that extends widthwise from the inner edge “at least about the width of one of said cleats.” At least one other error being relied upon as the basis for reissue is that this recitation of the axle guard system is too narrow. The axle guard system of my invention comprises at least one circumferential barrier mounted on a cleat-free area that extends widthwise from the inner edge a distance.
